1} Remembering Charlie Whitebread

On Thursday, the USC Law community will pay tribute to Prof. Charlie Whitebread, who died Sept. 16. The memorial, called “Remembering Charlie: A Champagne Reception and Tribute to honor the late Charles Whitebread,” will be held from noon to 2:30 p.m. in Town & Gown on the USC University Park Campus. To RSVP for the memorial, please visit USC Law’s tribute site.

2} Election ’08: What Happened and Why

A panel of legal and political experts convened at USC Law on Nov. 6 to discuss the presidential election and many of the ballot measures put before voters nationwide. The panel included USC Law Professor Kareem Crayton; Dan Schnur, director of the Unruh Institute and former Sen. John McCain political strategist during the 2000 campaign; Andre Pineda, principal of Pineda Consulting; and John Matsusaka, president of the Initiative and Referendum Institute at USC.

Read about the discussion, or view a video of the event.

USC Law also hosted a pre-election panel discussion, “Red States, Blue States, and the State of the Race,” on Thursday, Oct. 30. It featured Crayton, Schnur, Pineda and Bruce Nash, president of Nash Information Services, a consulting business that provides data analysis and projections for the movie business.

Watch video of the pre-election event.

3) Law Students Elect to Protect

On Nov. 4, USC Law students joined the ranks of countless volunteers who helped to ensure that Southern California voters overcame obstacles to the ballot box. They teamed up with IMPACT, the law student branch of Election Protection, the nation’s largest nonpartisan voter protection coalition. As legal volunteers, students helped to ensure that voters understood their rights and monitored polling locations.

“Youth participation in politics is an issue that is always at the forefront and, unfortunately, mostly in a negative light,” said Naomi Ages ’10, who led the USC Law student effort. “This is a really positive step students can take to get involved in a really important aspect of the political process, educate themselves about an issue they may only have a basic understanding of, and prove to themselves and the public that young people are not apathetic — especially in such a critical election.”

Read about the students’ preparation, and view a slideshow of their efforts.

4) Legal Careers in Sports: No Pain, No Gain

Many law students dream of one day working in sports, but they have no idea how to get there. To offer some guidance, two speakers who work in the industry recently gave USC Law students their best advice for launching a career in sports law. Ross Viselman, associate counsel for the Los Angeles Dodgers, and Adam Karon ’05, an agent at Sosnick Cobbe Sports, spoke about how they got their jobs, what they do and what they recommend to current law students looking for similar careers. The Oct. ’16 event was sponsored by the Jewish Law Students Association. Their primary counsel: be prepared for lean times early as you network to get your foot in the door.
5} Juvenile Justice the Topic of Roth Lecture

>> The juvenile justice system is failing American youth, according to the Honorable Terry J. Hatter Jr. Hatter, United States senior district judge for the Central District of California, presented the 2008 Justice Lester W. Roth Lecture at USC Law Oct. 27, during which he discussed his decades of experience working with youth offenders and the state of juvenile justice today. The goal of prosecutors and politicians to be tough on crime is “the core of what is wrong with the juvenile justice system,” Hatter said.

6} For 9/11 Victims, It’s Cash or the Courthouse

>> After interviewing dozens of family members and victims of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, USC Law Prof. Gillian Hadfield has shed new light on the question of whether sustained efforts through tort reform and alternative dispute resolution to reduce litigation threaten to undermine important democratic values. In the article “Framing the Choice Between Cash and the Courthouse: Experiences With the 9/11 Victim Compensation Fund,” published in Law & Society Review, Hadfield offers a startling perspective on the impact of the Victims Compensation Fund, established by Congress to provide financial assistance and an alternative to civil litigation for survivors of the attacks.

“Responses make it clear that potential plaintiffs saw much more at stake than monetary compensation and that the choice to forego litigation required the sacrifice of important nonmonetary, civic values: obtaining and publicizing information about what happened, prompting public findings of accountability for those responsible, and participating in the process of ensuring that there would be responsive change to what was learned about how the attacks and deaths happened,” Hadfield said.

7} Talking About What Blood Won’t Tell

>> USC Law Professor Ariela J. Gross spent years unearthing the legal history of racial identity. In her new book, What Blood Won’t Tell: A History of Race on Trial in America (Harvard University Press, 2008), Gross recounts stories of racial identity trials in American courts, from the early republic well into the 20th century. The racial identity trials — court cases that determined a person’s “race” as well as their rights and privileges — help explain the history of race and racism in America.

“Over the past two centuries, people have fought to establish their whiteness in order to lay claim to full citizenship in local courtrooms, administrative and legislative hearings, and the U.S. Supreme Court,” Gross said. “These trials have often turned less on legal definitions of race as percentages of blood or ancestry than on the way people presented themselves to society and demonstrated their moral and civic character.”

SUPPORT USC LAW THIS HOLIDAY SEASON
-------------------------------------------------------------------
The holiday season offers a special opportunity to reconnect with members of the USC Law alumni network, whether it’s offering time, attending an event or providing financial support. Please join USC Law’s philanthropic tradition and consider making a gift to the USC Law Annual Fund before December 31. Your investment in your alma mater will help ensure that current and future students have similar educational opportunities to those you enjoyed as a student.
You can make a gift online at law.usc.edu/give, or contact Development and Graduate Relations at (213) 743-1710.
Your participation in USC Law makes a difference!
