>> USC Law’s Career Services Office (CSO) is looking for volunteers for its Alumni Mentor Program for second- and third-year law students. In the tradition of the law school’s annual 1L Mentor Lunch, this volunteer opportunity will allow 2Ls and 3Ls to develop meaningful mentor relationships with USC Law alumni working in a practice area and employer setting in line with their career goals.

If you have questions about the program, please call (213) 740-7397 or e-mail careers@law.usc.edu.

2) Life After Securities Fraud
Joe Shew, former chief financial officer of real estate website Homestore.com, spoke to parents and students last Friday about his journey from a self-described “clean-cut family guy” to someone guilty of securities fraud. Shew was accompanied by his lawyer, Bob Fairbank, a USC Law lecturer.

To start the talk, Shew played a clip of a news anchor reporting the Homestore.com scandal.

“As I watched that, my heart was pounding out of my chest,” Shew said after the clip was over. “I watched that in my bedroom with the door shut and locked, basically curled up in the fetal position. After months of cooperating and then pleading guilty, the inevitability of my reality hadn’t caught up with me.”

Learn what Mr. Shew said about his crime and punishment.

Panel Debates Definition of Marriage

Rarely does a two-year-old ballot proposition continue to garner a steady stream of public debate following its passage. Yet, despite the unseasonably warm weather, students, faculty and staff gathered on Sept. 28 in the Fishbowl Chapel at the University Religious Center to discuss Proposition 8.

Moderated by Dr. Ann Crigler, director of the Unruh Institute of Politics and chair of the USC department of political science, and Lucy Mueller, managing editor of The Daily Trojan, the panel discussion --“Defining Marriage: Who Decides” -- focused on the constitutional, political and cultural ramifications of Prop. 8 on California’s residents.

Supreme Court Preview

USC Law and the student chapters of the Federalist Society and American Constitution Society presented the third annual U.S. Supreme Court Preview, featuring three of the nation’s top legal scholars – Kathleen Sullivan of Stanford University, John Eastman of Chapman University and Rebecca Brown of USC.

Moderated by Elizabeth Garrett, a USC Law professor who clerked for Justice Thurgood Marshall, the panel discussed a handful of the most important cases the Supreme Court will hear during the 2010 Term.

Legal Recruiter Offers Job-Seeking Advice

Amid the recession, many soon-to-be law school graduates are pessimistic about their job prospects. But on Sept. 22, law students who sacrificed their lunch break to attend a talk on the legal job market found that their situation might not be so bleak.

Rick Kolodny, president and founder of The Portfolio Group, an attorney search and placement firm in Los Angeles, spoke about the legal job market. Over the past 15 years, the firm has placed over 600 lawyers. Kolodny said that when firms were expanding, there was a strong demand for associates. When the market imploded in 2008, large and small firms alike began cutting. However, Kolodny says that today’s law students have reason to be optimistic, with market conditions expected to improve over the next several years.

“The good news is that the cost-cutting, the restructuring, the bloodletting is over,” he said. “The tone is decidedly upbeat.”

6} Student Law Journal Hosts Unemployment Symposium

>> The Los Angeles Public Interest Law Journal held its third annual symposium on Friday, Sept. 17. The topic at the USC-hosted event was “The Hidden Faces of Unemployment,” which delved beneath the issue of unemployment to explore how it is affecting marginalized communities: LGBTs, those with convictions on record, immigrants and, most relevantly, public interest law students.

The journal, which consists of law students from USC, UCLA, Loyola, Pepperdine and Southwestern, aims to gather members of the public interest community each year to discuss a relevant topic.

7} Moot Court Debuts New Website

>> For the members of USC Law’s Hale Moot Court Honors Program, the start of a new school year presented the perfect opportunity to debut the program’s website. Advocacy Vice Chair Jaysen Chung ’11 worked with Professor Rebecca Lonergan and others to create it. The website will offer up-to-date information about moot court events to current and prospective participants, as well as the legal community at large.

8} Professor’s World Health Org Work Highly Commended

>> A book co-edited by Prof. Alexander Capron was honored at the annual British Medical Association’s Medical Book Competition ceremony in London Sept. 14.

Casebook on Ethical Issues in International Health Research, co-edited by Capron, Richard Cash, Daniel Wikler and Abha Saxena for the World Health Organization (WHO), was awarded Highly Commended in the Basis of Medicine category.

“The best thing about being honored is that it will help to bring the book to the attention of more people conducting programs to improve the capacity of clinical investigators and research ethics committees, especially in developing countries, to grapple with a variety of ethical issues,” said Capron, the Scott H. Bice Chair in Healthcare, Law, Policy and Ethics, and professor of law and medicine.
