Tales from the Trenches: What Happens (in the Real World) with End of Life Decisions and Advance Health Care Directives?

Estate planners create documents like Advance Health Care Directives but don’t often get to see these documents put to the test. They also advise clients as to medical capacity and end-of-life decisions. This panel of experts will provide insight into what can happen when clients (or the family) try to use that advice and/or those documents. The panelists will also offer ideas on how to avoid the inevitable pitfalls.

Dorothy, We’re Not in Kansas Anymore: Venturing Outside of the Probate Court

Sometimes, circumstances or issues take you outside the comfort of the Probate Court. This panel will discuss those situations when you are forced – or choose – to do so. There are times when trust or estate matters intersect with civil court, family law court, bankruptcy court, Federal court or tax court. Considerations also arise regarding arbitrations and references. And of course, there is the mysterious world of jury trials. We will explore when you should consider these other forums, the pros and cons, how to evaluate the alternatives and what pitfalls to avoid.

Gifts, loans and sales are the three primary methods of making lifetime transfers of cash or other assets to children, grandchildren, other family members or to trusts for their benefit. The panelists will focus on both the tax and non-tax benefits of the last two methods: intra-family loans and sales. The panel will examine, among other strategies, sales to an irrevocable grantor trust and loans to a life insurance trust to finance the purchase of insurance on the life of the grantor.
